

Document: Columbian Phalanx Broadside

The Columbian Phalanx, also known as the Columbian Association, was founded in 1845 in Muskingum County, Ohio, seven miles from Zanesville. In area it was one of the largest phalanxes, with 2,700 acres; peak membership was around 150. It absorbed some members of the Beverly Association, a phalanx planned for Beverly, Ohio, but never completed. The residents lived in log cabins and ran an extensive farming operation during the community's short lifespan. However, the Columbian appears to have ceased operations later in the year of its founding. Details on its history are sparse.

—Timothy Miller, Encyclopedic Guide to American Intentional Communities

The special collections of Hamilton College has recently acquired this broadside printed upon the liquidation of the possessions of the Columbian Phalanx. Miller's assessment that the community ceased operations later in the year of its founding appears to be correct based on the date of the auction of their possessions scheduled for January 7, 1846. Information about many of the smaller phalanxes is very scarce, and printed materials from them are even scarcer.
